GovCMS website

- The GovCMS website has always been seen as the front door to GovCMS – the first port of call for information and contact points
- The site also serves a working example of what can be done on your platform – the GovCMS website is hosted on and powered by GovCMS
- An exercise in opportunity for us to demonstrate what can be done for those working on or considering our platform

The opportunity

- As part of user research sessions, customer feedback and considerations with modern online offerings and programme capacity, opportunities exist to improve
- Considerations for self-service, where possible to better inform our existing and potential customers
- More user friendly information for consumption, where introductory information is better targeted to our audience mix and push points to relevant further reading through user journeys

Introducing

- An initial drop in our Beta suite to assist in your GovCMS journey
- Self service tools to assist in estimating costs and eligibility
- A more consumable Product and Services Guide – the offerings in our Drupal Services Panel
- A stream of information around updates and improvements to the material

We've got 3 initial areas in Beta

1. The first stage of self service tools we want to share
2. An initial drop of “How Do I” material, intended for those wanting high level information in process
3. Calls to action for the community to get involved with suggestions, providing feedback and getting involved in future user research sessions

There's also a Coming attractions space listed, our next hit list of material headed to the Beta region of the site. Watch this space!

Where does this go

- That's dependent on you, the community!
- We're looking to introduce more information and features that help the community, but we need to know what you want
- We want feedback, we want suggestions, we want to make it easier
- We want to get these, and other needs of the community, out of Beta and further integrated into the website

Let's take a look...

Women in IT panel

Question for panel members
